Denver Headache and Spine Center Provides Atlas Orthogonal Chiropractic Care, Unique in Colorado

Littleton, Colorado, February 20, 2019—Housing two of only three board-certified atlas orthogonal (AO) practitioners in the state of Colorado, Denver Headache and Spine Center offers non-invasive care to significantly reduce chronic head and neck pain via the realignment of the atlas vertebra. This mainstream, non-manipulative approach not only relieves irritation and inflammation dramatically, it also diminishes peripheral risks often associated with traditional spine manipulation, such as ligament damage or arterial dissection.

According to the Center’s founder, Dr. Randy James, “The subsequent pain from trauma to the upper neck — whether through an accident, injury, or repetitive stress — is the result of the body’s attempt to compensate for the misalignment. The resulting damage can manifest itself through chronic pain in the head, neck, back, shoulders, and limbs. To address this pain, we perform a thorough assessment of symptoms through neurological examinations, precise imaging methods, and personalized consultation to determine if AO adjustments will be advantageous for the patient.”

The Center’s support of patients goes beyond atlas orthogonal care. Dr. James recognizes that AO treatment may not be the answer for every situation, or may be only one element necessary in combatting on-going pain. Therefore, the practice connects patients with its vast and highly collaborative network of medical sub-specialists including neurologists, physical, vestibular, and vision therapists, providing patients with realistic and effective alternatives to target and resolve the source of their discomfort.
